

The Long and Winding Road to Equal Pay

Slower Progress and Substantial Differences Among States Mark the 1990s

Highlights for Working Women in Maryland

- Working women in Maryland are farther along the road to equal pay than women in many states; in 2000, Maryland's working women earned 83.5 percent as much per hour as men, while nationwide women earned only 77.6 percent as much per hour as men. Maryland ranked fourth among all states in equal pay.
- The rate of progress in closing Maryland's hourly wage gap was better than average in the 1990s. Maryland ranked 19th among all states in progress in closing the hourly wage gap.
- Slow wage growth for men contributed to the closing of the gap—wages for men in Maryland grew by only 2.5 percent over the decade, compared with 10.9 percent wage growth for women.
- At the current rate of change, working women in Maryland won't have equal pay until 2024. Nationwide, women won't achieve equal pay until after 2050.
